A Negro Democrat.

David W. Parker, colored, who prints a Democratic newspaper, Tribune, at Tuscaloosa, Ala., gives his reason for being a Democrat in response to a query from an ex-Yankee soldier. He says:

"I am a Democrat because I want my people to be on good terms with the brain, the power and the money of the South. I am a Democrat because I want to meet new conditions with new thoughts and ideas. I am a Democrat because a majority of the best white people of the South are Democrats, and I believe it to be the best interest of my humble race to take a bold, outspoken stand with the whites of the South. They run the courts, own the banks, and control the great interests of the Southland. I am with them because it is to my best interest. I am a Democrat for practical purposes. Lincoln, Summer and Blaine ad; so is the great Republican of the past. The party of Mark Hanna is a political machine to make the rich richer and the poor poorer.

"I am a Democrat because 90 per cent, of my race work for the whites of the South and I believe that there will be a better feeling should both races vote as one, because the interest of one is the interest of the other.

"I am a Democrat because the Democrats of the South paid out of their pockets seventy-millions of the thty millions of money expended for the public school education among my race.

"I am a Democrat because the Democratic party is the exponent of the best principles of the best government on earth; I am a Democrat because I believe in liberty and justice and free speech and a free press.

Now, Mr. Yankee Soldier, I have given you a few reasons why I am a Democrat. I hope you good luck. I guess you draw a pension and expect that you are a federal officeholder or a candidate. God be with you, and let us thank Him for nigher Democrats' live in peace and harmony and all unite in making our common fellow countrymen more intelligent, prosperous and pa triotic.

"Yours for Democratic success."

To Study Sultan's Harem.

Miss Alma Dalma, the wellknown comic opera singer, and former wife of Rudolph Aronson, has undertaken to penetrate the mystery and sectrets of life in the harem of the Sultan of Morocco."

Miss Dalma left Tangler by caravan for Fez last Tuesday, and here she hopes to secretly study the most curiosly interesting social institution on earth.

Miss Dalma goes armed with letters to influential people.

Miss Dalma will later on write the results of this interesting visit, if she comes back alive.

Miss Dalma is an old Casino favorite, and after her success in "Erminie" ten years ago she went abroad to cultivate her voice. She received instruction from Mme. Marchesi and Labrode in Paris and from Mme. Ricoi, in Milan.

A President's Grave Unmarked.

Two pages of pictures in the June Ladies' Home Journal, giving views of the places "Where Our Presidents are Buried," recall the fact that four of the first five of our Thief Executives sleep in the soil of Old Virginia. The picture shows that the grave of President John Tyler, at Richmond, Virginia, is absolutely unmarked-even by a mall headstone. Visitors to Hollywood Cemetery are shown a a scarcely perceptible mound, over which a magnolia tree spreads its shade in summer, as a resting place of our tenth President. The burial-places of all the others are marked with monuments or tombs, except those of the two Adamses, who are buried under the portico of the First Church at Quincy, Massachusetts.

A great many people who are called light-hearted are misjudged by a wrong location of the buoyREMARKABLE LICHENS.

Some Are Used for Dyes-Others Are Food for Many People.

The grayish-green or straw-colored lichen, which Shakespeare calls "idlemoss," once enjoyed a great reputa-tion as a tonic and anodyne. It was formerly the basis of hair powders and perfumes, and it still is used in the preparation of fine orange dyes. The prettiest pieces are found on fir trees, and wild animals eat it with avidity.

The ability to color vividly is the to you. specialty of famous lichens. The beautiful Scotch tartans for many centuries were dyed entirely from different lichens, heather twigs and birch leaves, and no better or more lasting colors have been obtained from woods and chemicals. The Scotch cudbear gives a color almost equal to the famous orchil, and another of the same family, found on the rocks of southern France, imparts the last brilliant finish to French silks of every shade of rose color and crimson.

The most valuable of the lichen family, however, is roccella, which is used to impart an exquisite lilac or purple tinge to rich silks. It is an almost colorless lichen, and, when gathered in large quantities, has the perfume of primroses.

A Florentine family discovered its virtue, and it was long their secret, though many believe that it is the same moss spoken of by Dioscorides his rake. and Theophrastus, and used in their day for dyeing wool.

As lichens grown in very hot cli-mates yield the finest color, most of those imported by manufacturers come from India, Ceylon and the arid rocks of Aden, Socotra and the Cape de Verde islands.

The Swiss make their favorite domestic dye from the beautiful goldencolored lichen found on the shrubs and on elm trees, and the Swedes scrape it into the tallow of which they make their "golden festival candles."

offices still. To the Icelander, Lap-lander and Eskimo the lichen called Iceland moss is everything that wheat is to the Caucasian or rice to the Hindoo. It contains full 80 per cent. of starch, and hence its value as food.

The Icelanders use it in powder for bread, they add it to their soup, they boil it in milk, they make porridge of it, they dry it in small pieces for a reunited country and let federal fodder for their cattle; in fact, it is and Confederate black soldiers and so necessary to their life in every way that they acknowledge piously: "A bountiful Providence sends us bread out of the very stones."

On the uncultured pastures of Lapland the deer, which are the sole wealth of the Laps, browse, and without this provision-the snowy tufts of the lichen known as reindeer mose —the country would be absolutely uninhabitable.

When the ground is covered with snow then another lichen, called rockhair, takes its place. This lichen, in the vast, dreary pine forests of that gloomy country, is a most peculiar feature. Its huge, dusky funereal fes-toons stretch from tree to tree, exhaling a damp, earthy smell, and creating a perpetual twilight. But it is life to the reindeer, and the reindeer is life to man.

In Algeria, Tartary and Persia there is an edible species of lichen of apparent supernatural origin. Sud-denly it falls on the ground like a rain, often to the depth of three inches or more. It is in small lumps like a pea, grayish, irregular, inodorous and insipid, having at no time any appearance of a base of support. In 1829, during a war between Russia and Persia, when large tracts of country on the Caspian sea were in a state of famine, they were suddenly covered by this lichen, which seemed indeed to fall from Heaven.

The sheep ate it greedily, and the famished people, instructed by them, made it into a bread. Rains of edible lichen, well authenticated, occurred during the siege of Herat, and also as late as 1846 one fell at Wilna.

In the department of medicine lichens have a weird and magical reputation. They were also favorites of the early alchemists, and formed part and portion of all their sympathetic cintments and remarkable distillations. In the making of parchment and pasteboard they have already largely usurped the place of gum arabic, and are also of great importance in the preparation of perfumes and other toilet articles.—N. Y.
